May 25, 2019 Quick Connect Technologies YDS 1.33 cable and software is here .Q: Python Break in for loop I'm not sure what it is called but, the following is similar to my problem: What I want to do is print i from 0 to n without breaking the loop each time: if n == 0: i = 1 else: i = i + 1 for i in range(1, n + 1): print i The problem is that I want to keep printing i instead of doing i = i + 1 and printing i again. Is there some way to do this? A: What about: for i in range(1, n + 1): print i That will still run your loop, but not increase i within the loop body. You can also use the fact that range(0, n) is the same as range(1, n). Just a different notation: for i in range(1, n + 1): print i Q: How can I use Git with a Working Copy that the program has been compiled with VS2013? I have been working on a windows 2008R2 VM which has been running good for many weeks, until my VS2013 project started to make some changes that affected the old VC++
